Someday is Here

Author James Bryan Smith was a guest speaker at the Apprentice Basic Conference. As he discussed ministry, he said: “Do what you can and not what you can’t.”

The statement was made to encourage his audience not to be preoccupied with what they are unable to do but to focus on what they are able to do. He went on to repeat the essence of the statement by saying, “Start with what you can do.”

I confess, for years I focused on what I was unprepared or unable to do. I often concluded that I was lacking in knowledge, skill, or expertise. I often compared myself to others and perceived myself to be lacking. As a result, I severely limited myself and, more importantly, gave myself a pass from some opportunities to make a difference.

Finally, I realized that the problem was not my preparation but my thinking.

Dr. Evertt Huffard, former dean of Harding School of Theology, regularly asked his ministry students what they plan on doing differently. One of his students responded, “I just wonder what I will be doing someday.” Dr. Huffard paused and said, “Think about your age. Someday is here.”

Someday is here!

Here are a few suggestions for making the most of opportunities that may be before us.

1. Quit comparing yourself to others who seem more qualified and prepared.
2. Focus on how you are already prepared to serve right now.
3. Continue to learn, while you continue to serve.
4. Start now. Someday is here.

Question:

Have you ever found yourself waiting for someday? What would it take for you to begin right now?
